DUELS NOT SPORTSMANLIKE.

Englishman Says They Are Not Fair

Without a Handicap. Dueling has come in for criticism on various scores, but a writer in Baily's Magazine objects to it for the reason that t is "unsportsmanlike." He declares that the essence of "good sport" lies in the handicap and that in dueling there isn't anything of that sort. "The lamb," says he, "has to go out and be eaten by the lion, the lion having previously made love to his wife or libeled him in print. Of course it takes bravery to go 'go out,' but the duelist's bravery as a matter of fact is in inverse propertion to his skill.

"Barring a very slight element of luck, he who can shoot straightest has the issue in his hand. This is the ground of my complaint against the lack of proper other games of hazard with loaded dice. The truest bravery, if its measure be disregard of death, is that of the duelists in Japan, who merely commit suicide simultaneously. Both win, both lose, and presumably a third party is found to console the fair object of the encounter. "Perhaps the most absurd form of the modern duel is that of which I saw something twenty years ago, when I was a student in a German university. Though opposed to dueling in his army, the Em-
